“ Dear Laurie, 9/13/2012

I couldn't sleep tonight because I have been thinking about you. One minute, I am balling my eyes out because I miss you so much, and in the next minute I find my heart singing at what you must be experiencing at this very moment: face to face with your Savior, no more struggle, no more difficulty, you can hear perfectly without your hearing aides, and He has wiped every tear from your eyes. I know you heard these words early Wednesday morning, "Well done, good and faithful servant. Enter now into the joy of your Lord".

I have been struggling for a day now to try and come up with a word that best describes your true beauty. There were many that came to mind as I read through Facebook post after Facebook post describing all of the beautiful ways that God used you in the lives of those around you. Many have described you as: a godly mother and wife, an artist, always smiling & positive, best sister anyone could ask for, having a quiet & innocent spirit, always serving, one of the most genuinely sweet and kind persons ever known, gentle & compassionate and loving to laugh. As I thought about you and your life, a word came to me: the word "pretense". I think, Laurie, it came to me because you had none: absolutely no pretense. I looked up the definition: pretense is "a false display of feelings, attitudes, or intentions". It was the exact opposite of who God had made you to be. You had no agendas, no masks, no keeping people at arms length, none of the emotional walls with which many of us struggle. As a matter of fact, I bet you probably didn't even know there were walls you could have put up. And that is what made you so beautiful, Laurie: that sheer innocent beauty that God poured into your life and you have poured into ours. The point is, Laurie, we are so blessed having had the privilege to have you in our lives. You have taught us all so much by your example, and those lessons will live on in our hearts and lives.

I love and miss you tremendously, Laurie. I know this separation is not forever and that God himself has promised that we will meet again.

Love, Your Little Bro Danny

Laurie was an extremely devoted loving mother to her two girls.

Laurie showed the kind of love "agape" that Jesus showed for us. She will always be remembered in my heart, my friend.
