Maggie worked hard all of her life beginning when her father and mother were divorced and she was only 12 years old. She was away from both of her parents, staying in homes with strangers working for a place to live. After Maggie and Clarence were married they moved to the Saline Valley Farms; Saline, Michigan which was a co-operative community. Clarence was the main farmer at that time. Maggie also worked there in the butchering of the chickens. Preparing them for delivery and worked in the cannery. In later years Maggie worked for the Universal Die Casting factory in Saline and she retired from there in 1977. Ever since her husband died, her daughters stayed at night twice a week. After she was in the hospital in 2013 her daughters stayed every night with her. She was still canning up until she was a 96 year old. She has always burned wood for heating her house and still maintains the woodstove herself by putting in the big chunks of wood. Maggie has always had a lot of knowledge to tell everyone and all have learned a lot from her wisdom.
